Kelso Abbey

Kelso, Roxburghshire, TD5 7JF

Kelso Abbey was built in 1128 and in the years following, it was one of the finest examples of Romanesque architecture.

Finally finished, it was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin and St John in 1243. It was soon one of the largest and richest in Scotland, having a superb library in medieval times. In the 12th and 13th centuries, the Abbot of Kelso was granted the right to wear a mitre, which gave him precedence higher than any other Scottish abbot. The abbey's wealth came from its vast lands, its churches, schools, farms and its granges in the Cheviot Hills.

Once the grandest of Border Abbeys, Kelso was subject to cannon fire by Henry VIII's armies during the Rough Wooing of the 1540s. However, even in its fragmentary state, Kelso Abbey is a superb piece of architecture.

Head inland to the Mire Loch in search of swans, ducks, damselflies and butterflies. Learn more about the wildlife, geology and history of St Abb's Head at the Nature Centre.

You can easily spend hours in the summer months watching and listening to the thousands of seabirds who nest in the high cliffs. Away from the cliff's edge a carpet of wildflowers spreads out among the grassland - look out for sea pinks, rock rose, wild thyme and purple milk vetch.
